

UFSC San Francisco Bay Area Chapter NEWS

Many of us often consider pursuing additional education in order to advance in our current careers, explore a new profession, or just to challenge our minds and expand our thinking, but wonder how to fit school into our already hectic schedules. To address this issue and several others, the chapter presented a free Continuing Education Seminar in downtown San Francisco on March 17.

The seminar was held as part of the monthly membership meeting, and welcomed representatives from some of the best and adult educational institutes in the country.

Representatives from Golden Gate University, Holy Names College and the University of Phoenix made presentations on the numerous working adult degree programs they offer.

These experts discussed available degrees, class schedules, admissions, education financing, and more, shedding light on a subject many are interested in but don't know how easy it is to get started. Each presenter spoke for about 20 minutes, and then took questions from the audience. These colleges offer continuing education programs in everything from Business to Technology to Communications.

UFSC member James Wright found the seminar especially beneficial. "I have decided to pursue my MBA with one of the executive programs that was presented on that evening. So the timing could not have been better for me," he said. "This was one of the best benefits that I have gotten from the UFSC participation on a local level."

To find the degree or non-degree program that fits within your already busy schedule, classes are offered in the evenings, weekends only, in the classroom and even online. Marketing Committee Co-Chair Cheryl McDonald found the seminar valuable and hopes the chapter can offer it each year.
